"This Page Intentionally LeftBlack"

I have collected over a period of three years receipts and various discarded papers and packing materials. These are all evidence of my own consumerism and materialistic desires. How quickly many of these purchases were discarded or became obsolete! The "Paper Flower" assemblages are my attempt to transform the purchases into something permanent. The magnitude of the assemblages are a testament to the power of the purchase moment. It is also my effort to recycle and transform the wrapping paper that so carefully protected the items I so desperately wanted at the time.

Polaroid Writings

Jim Caspar, founder of LensCulture, said to me in Paris last year: I just wish you hadn't written on the pictures. Well, it is a way of looking for, and hopefully finding, a valid translation, not only for the words but for the pictures, too. Songs, poems, prayers, curses, riddles and famous last words. And pictures. You might say, I'm not a photographer at all, I'm a translator.

Why Polaroids? They tend to work magic. First they make me despair by showing me what a bad photographer I am. Then they transform themselves into things of beauty I could never achieve willingly. Or they don't.
